Death of 12-Year-Old Boy in France Following HPV Vaccination Triggers Probe Into Gardasil Safety and School Vaccine Campaigns

French prosecutors have launched an investigation into the death of a 12-year-old boy who collapsed minutes after receiving Gardasil's human papillomavirus vaccine in a school setting and subsequently died of head trauma, according to French media.

French prosecutors have launched an investigation into the death of a 12-year-old boy who collapsed minutes after receiving Gardasil's human papillomavirus (HPV) vaccine in a school setting and subsequently died of head trauma, according to French media.

The boy, referred to in news reports as Elouan, studied at Saint-Dominique College, a private school in Saint-Herblain, near Nantes. According to Agence France-Presse (AFP), he felt "malaise" 15 minutes after vaccination and sustained a "heavy fall."

French newspaper Le Monde reported that the vaccination occurred on Oct. 19 as part of a nationwide campaign prompting HPV vaccines in French schools for students 11-14 years old.

Following his injury, Elouan was taken to Nantes University Hospital, but his condition deteriorated and he died on Oct. 27.

Le Monde, quoting the Regional Health Authority of Pays de la Loire (ARS), reported that Elouan "fell heavily to the floor," with the back of his head striking the "hard surface" in the room where the vaccination took place.

In an Oct. 30 press release cited by Ouest France, ARS said, "Despite the intervention" of the nurses present, Elouan's "condition deteriorated in the following days in relation to the severity of his head trauma."

The Nantes public prosecutor's office opened a preliminary investigation for involuntary manslaughter in Elouan's death. According to Le Monde, prosecutor Renaud Gaudeul seeks to "determine whether the medical treatment of this minor — before, during and after the injection — was carried out according to the rules of the art."

Gaudeul told Ouest France, "We want to understand how a young boy could have died in these circumstances." No complaint has yet been filed by the victim's parents, Ouest France reported.

In its press release, ARS ruled out any connection between the HPV vaccine and Elouan's collapse, claiming instead, "This type of malaise can occur due to stress caused by vaccination but is unrelated to the vaccine product or to a quality defect in the vaccine."

Nevertheless, the agency ordered an administrative investigation "to establish the conditions for carrying out vaccination and its medical supervision … as well as the conditions for medical care of the child."

French Minister of Health Aurélien Rousseau also addressed the incident, telling the French National Assembly the "malaise" Elouan suffered was "the main adverse effect of any form of vaccination" and had "no link with the injected product."

"Everything will obviously be examined and made public," Rousseau said. "As I speak to you, approximately 20,000 doses have been injected. This is the only serious, tragic adverse event that we have had to experience."

Jean-Jacques Bourguignon's 15-year-old daughter, Marie-Océane, was injured after receiving Gardasil in 2010. He told The Defender that, contrary to Rousseau's claims, the French government has ignored reports of adverse events. Having "written several times to our presidents and ministers of health," he said, "nothing happens."

French science journalist and writer Xavier Bazin, author of "Big Pharma démasqué!" and "Antivax toi-même!" wrote on his website that French health authorities were repeating "a fable" by the World Health Organization (WHO) that post-vaccination syncope is "psychological."

Also known as fainting, syncope is defined as a "temporary loss of consciousness with a quick recovery." The WHO calls this an immunization stress-related response.

Autopsy attributes Elouan's death to fall, not vaccination

According to AFP, the vaccination program was suspended in Loire-Atlantique on Oct. 20 but was slated to resume Nov. 6.

A French parent and activist who asked that she be referred to only as "Elin," told The Defender the HPV vaccination campaign in the country's schools was announced in March 2023 and officially began Oct. 2 in French secondary schools.

On vaccination days, she said, mobile teams visit the school in question. A doctor's presence is recommended, but not mandatory, she said.

Both parents must give their consent prior to the vaccination and other vaccines, such as measles, mumps and rubella, or MMR, are also offered to students who are not "up to date" with their vaccination schedule, Elin said.

AFP reported that the vaccination campaign launched at the beginning of October "could suffer" in the face of widespread opposition.

For instance, in an Oct. 26 press release shared with The Defender, Philippe Delorme, general secretary of the Organization of Catholic Education, recommended pausing the HPV vaccination campaign in French Catholic schools.

Speaking to Le Monde, Delorme said Elouan's death is "a terrible tragedy, an absolute tragedy," adding that he is "in shock … like the entire educational community."

Yet, according to Didier Lambert, president of the Mutual Aid Association for Macrophage Myofascitis Sufferers (E3M), "The vaccination campaign has not been suspended. Delorme has advised this suspension, but each school does as it wishes."

In an interview with Nexus, Lambert said E3M "filed a request to investigate the presence of aluminum and/or HPV DNA in [Elouan's] brain," and that E3M had been asking "for a moratorium on HPV vaccination in middle schools for several months."

Lambert told The Defender his organization also "sent an email to the public prosecutor, requesting that the autopsy include a search for the aluminic adjuvant and HPV DNA fragments," but has not received a response.

Instead, according to Lambert, the prosecutor issued an Oct. 31 statement saying, "The autopsy indicates that the cause of death of this young boy was craniocerebral trauma following a fall to the back of the head."

"His death was investigated," Elin said. "I imagine they did a postmortem, but I doubt they did a thorough investigation (brain, organs) since he had suffered a trauma to his head."

She said to her knowledge, Elouan had no known prior medical history that would indicate risk, a point that has "not been brought up in the media either."

Syncope a known side effect of Gardasil

Experts who spoke with The Defender highlighted the risks of the HPV vaccine.

Kim Mack Rosenberg, acting general counsel for Children's Health Defense and co-author of "The HPV Vaccine On Trial: Seeking Justice For A Generation Betrayed," told The Defender that "Gardasil is one of the most, if not the most reported vaccines to the U.S. Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS)."

Michael L. Baum, an attorney with California law firm Wisner Baum, told The Defender the Vaccine Injury Compensation Program (VICP) "has paid more than $70 million in damages and awards to children injured by Gardasil." Baum cited "a growing body of research outlining the risks" associated with the Gardasil HPV vaccine.

According to Rosenberg, the Gardasil vaccine is associated with "autoimmune diseases and disorders, dysautonomia, neurological disorders, reproductive disorders and more."

Other risks associated with the vaccine include chronic fatigue and chronic pain syndrome, fibromyalgia, Guillain-Barré syndrome, immune thrombocytopenia, lupus, postural orthostatic tachycardia syndrome, small fiber neuropathy and death.

Syncope is another possible adverse event. "It is clear to me that this boy suffered syncope-type symptoms," said Baum, who cited a 2017 study published in Drug Safety.

Syncope is one of the few "'table' injuries — which are presumed caused by a vaccine," and recognized by the VICP "if it occurs within an hour of receiving a Gardasil vaccine," Rosenberg said. She said the descriptions in the French press suggest Elouan experienced syncope.

The Postlicensure Safety Surveillance report authored in 2009 by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and published in JAMA, said there were 3 times more adverse events reported for Gardasil than all other vaccines combined, including "disproportional reporting of syncope and venous thromboembolic events."

Rosenberg also pointed out that no study has yet proven that HPV vaccines prevent cervical cancer. Moreover, the vaccine's clinical trials were not designed to determine this, and the post-marketing studies "do not support that claim either."

Emily Tarsell, whose 21-year-old daughter, Christina, died in 2008, 18 days after receiving her third dose of the Gardasil vaccine, told The Defender, "The CDC and FDA never investigated why, according to even their own data, there is disproportional reporting of syncope and thromboembolic events."

Bazin said that French parents were not informed, in documents provided to them accompanying their children's vaccination, that syncope was a common adverse event.

"I am quite sure that it didn't mention any adverse events or anything that could deter parents from doing it," he said.

Elin told The Defender, "Parents do not receive the product leaflet of the vaccine either, before giving their consent."

On his website, Bazin also noted that "death is one of the recognized side effects listed on the U.S. package insert for the Gardasil vaccine."

Official account of Elouan's death 'a story, highly dubious in some respects'

French authorities' claims that Elouan died because of vaccination-related stress or due to a fear of needles were also dismissed by experts who spoke with The Defender.

"We are not convinced by this argument of syncope of psychosomatic origin, nor by the fact that death is necessarily attributable to head trauma," Lambert told Nexus.

Tarsell said, "It's not credible or science-based to say that fear of needles causes death in a healthy child."

Bazin called the authorities' official account "a 'story,' highly dubious in some respects," adding that "even if true, it shows how inadequate the vaccination setup is in schools."

"Due to the adverse events reported after Gardasil injection, it is best for students to get the shot in a medical facility where they can get rapid treatment if they suffer side effects and can be medically monitored for a half hour after vaccination," Baum said.

Elin identified other flaws in France's school vaccination program, including no clear guidelines regarding preventive measures, such as space to lie down, enough adults to keep an eye on many vaccinated students, sufficient time to recover before returning to class or individual risk assessment of each student by a doctor.

"In the event of fainting, it's vital to distinguish between vagal malaise and anaphylactic shock — bearing in mind that anaphylactic shock can also occur within 15 minutes of the injection, in the event of allergy to one of the vaccine's components," Bazin wrote.

"These precautions tend to fall by the wayside when it's decided to 'make the numbers' by massively vaccinating in schools," he said, likening the situation to an "assembly line."

"The fact that they didn't lie the boy down when he said he didn't feel well after vaccination is a great mistake," Bazin told The Defender. "That alone shows, in my opinion, that you should not vaccinate in schools."

On Nov. 14, France's National Medicines Agency issued new recommendations regarding school vaccinations, requiring students who have just been vaccinated to "remain lying down (on floor mats or blankets) or sitting on the ground, with their backs against a wall, in a clear space."

According to French newspaper La Depeche, the new recommendations are a direct response to Elouan's death, and aim "to prevent such a tragedy from happening again."

For the Union for the Prevention and Management of Health Crises (UPGCS) though, this is not enough. In a Nov. 20 press release, UPGCS said the new recommendations "sound like an admission: the campaign that was organized in secondary schools seems to be lacking the most elementary safety measures."

UPGCS called for the immediate suspension of the HPV school vaccination campaign, "for the safety and physical integrity of all children in France," in a "référé liberté" (akin to a request for an emergency injunction) filed with the Nantes Administrative Court by the organization and three parents.

Experts question push to vaccinate teenage boys for HPV

Some experts also questioned the necessity of giving the HPV vaccine to teenage boys.

"The chances of a teenage boy contracting any of the cancers, including head and neck, anal and penile, associated with HPV is exceedingly rare," Rosenberg said. "These are cancers generally diagnosed in people over the age of 60."

"To give it to teenage boys to protect their current or future female partners from cervical or other cancers doesn't hold water," she added, noting that "the median age for cervical cancer diagnosis in the U.S. is 50 years old."

According to Baum, it can take decades for a persistent HPV infection to proceed to the development of cervical or anal cancer.

"The median age of death from cervical cancer is 58, and death from anal cancer is 66," Baum said. "Teenagers essentially have zero risk of dying from cervical or anal cancer."

The France-based "For Aluminum-Free Vaccines" campaign published on its website excerpts from a 2016 exchange between Hugues Fisher of France's National AIDS and Hepatitis Council, and Dr. Daniel Floret of the French Technical Vaccination Committee, at a hearing deliberating the expansion of the HPV vaccination program.

While Floret advocated launching an HPV vaccination campaign for teenage girls, Fisher was adamant the program should also include teenage boys. Floret said, "For boys, it's virtually a vaccine with very little direct individual benefit," but Fischer said, "It's possible to write that, indirectly, it's to protect women against cervical cancer."

France resumes school HPV vaccination program 'as if nothing happened'

According to Elin, a campaign by French parents and activists in September resulted in at least four Catholic schools withdrawing from the HPV school vaccination campaign.

Nevertheless, the campaign continued, and following Elouan's death, Bazin said the vaccination program has resumed nationwide "as if nothing happened," characterizing this as "infuriating."

Yet there have been some successes, according to Elin, who said, "The HPV vaccination campaign has been slow and difficult to get going, with few parents consenting. Is it cost-effective to mobilize vaccination teams when few students sign up?"

She said she "would not be surprised" to see legal actions filed by associations and parents.

Similarly, Lambert said, "It seems that HPV vaccination in schools has not met with the expected success. Elouan's death will certainly reinforce this mistrust.

Experts urged parents to think carefully if considering the HPV vaccine for their children.

"Based on the history of Gardasil's link with severe adverse events, mandating Gardasil in the U.S., France or elsewhere will result in unnecessary injuries to young children, teens, and others. Given the risks, families must have a choice," Rosenberg said.

Baum said, "Do not let your child get the Gardasil vaccine without understanding the risks versus benefits," noting it targets only nine of HPV's 200-plus strains. He called Pap tests "The most effective and side-effect-free means of preventing cervical cancer."

It should be illegal to market Gardasil to parents without informing them of the dangers. Difficult not to get angry at this sad, sad event. Interesting, but not unexpected to see how they are trying to weasel out of blaming the shot, and blaming fear of needles.

> "Doctors" are trained to prescribe drugs. They are low-paid drug pushers. The high-paid ones probably give their buyers more info about dangers. However, the high-paid ones spend their life dodging the law, when they aren't working with the law to smuggle in the stuff. So I guess they've calculated the trade-off and find it amenable.

Remember what Nancy Reagan said about what to do when offered a drug you knew nothing about, she said, "Just say no."
Adherence to this childhood vaccination schedule has led to an explosion in chronic illness for children.
Parents, "Just say no."

I may get back to the article; although, it's the same old evil. First of all...a vaccine for Cervical Cancer shouldn't be given to young boys at all - or even young girls, for that matter. Are they all hanging out in sleezy bars? Do they have multiple "partners"?. Somehow, I just can't see 10 and 11 year olds being that sexually active! Secondly; people really shouldn't use the words Gardasil and Safety in the same sentence! I suspect that at least tens of thousands of lives have already been destroyed by that Bioweapon!

> There is zero reason to give anyone any vaxx. There is no reliable study to prove they actually work. By the time Jenner rolled out his smallpox vaccine, smallpox was already in decline naturally. The same with Pasteur's typhus, Salk's polio, and many more. In the 1920s, measles caused pneumonia was fatal in 25% of cases. By the time the measles vaccine was introduced in 1963, ALL permanent damage, including death, from complications was under 500 in the US with a population of 170 million.
> Flu vaccines often have efficacy rates under 20%. pandemics occur naturally and humans resist naturally. Unfortunately, some die while that happens. Today, we have the US military "research" labs world wide doing who knows what, and strange "new diseases" keep appearing and shortly thereafter miracle vaccines developed. Just a coincidence I suppose.

Our non-vaxd son had measles and chicken pox as 4 and 6 year old, respectively, and has not been sick once, since. That's 18 years already.

Great article, thanks for getting this story out to a non-French audience. Unfortunately France under the Macron regime is a full-fledged vaxx and lockdown dictatorship with some of the harshest restrictions during the plan-demic. So it is not a surprise the government ignores the vaccine victims.

In France there are1452 cervical cancer deaths per year in a population of circa 66,000,000. Which is a proportion of 0.44/20,000 dying of cervical cancer vs the 1/20,000 deaths due to hpv jab doses in this latest campaign.
Add to that the numerous jab ADRs and this really is criminally reckless.

Whether or not they should have allowed their son to get this vaccine, I hope this poor family gets justice for their boy. The pressure from society, media, other parents, teachers, school administrators is intense and some people just never researched these issues or ever really had a reason to. In their minds they were probably acting with very good intentions. Hopefully each tragedy will at least contribute further to the 'great awakening' we all need to take our lives and our world back.

It is about time for Dr. Fauci to explain on TV all of the benefits and negligible adverse side effects of this vaccine.

His vote of confidence would probably destroy peoples opinion of it.
If vaccines are safe, can the first dose for ALL of them be administered at the same office visit? If not, which one is not safe? But wait, when something goes wrong, it is always something wrong with the victim, never the vaccine. Because all people are the same, and all vaccines are perfect, and the medical professionals always inject shots into people perfectly.

There are toxic adjuvants (extra crap like mercury, aluminum, etc.) in all vaccines which the drug manufacturers use to stimulate our immune systems to force our immune systems to react to their injection products. Otherwise, our immune systems would often simply ignore these injection products and our body would rid itself of them.

Well, it turns out that adjuvants such as mercury, aluminum and so forth can cause injury (adverse reaction outcomes) to us. And, if you are a baby or a youngster receiving two, three, or more of these injection products at the same time, the cumulative sum of let's say for example, the toxic aluminum in each of these injection products can be way above what the baby's or youngster's body can handle and that baby or youngster can be seriously harmed or even die from the excessive toxicity.

But, what would you expect when there are now seventy something required jabs on the childhood immunization schedule. Rather that asking parents to go to seventy something appointments, each spaced a few days apart, the drug manufacturers and medical community now is trying to triple or more the number

Thank you for explaining it so thoroughly. I never had children so I don't know how parents are pressured to allow their babies to be vaccinated so much, but is it mandatory for children to receive all these vaccines? Or can parents say NO and not have their children subjected to so much poison?

I've never had children either; but, from talking with parents, I think it may depend on what state you live in and maybe even the municipality. Apparently, parents cannot just say "no" in all or even most municipalities.

Some parents in the town next to me (in Maine) removed their children from public school and are homeschooling them, because they would have been forced to adhere to the childhood immunization schedule. Their children have had no vaccines and will undoubtedly be far healthier that those who get the "vaccines". That's been proven by a Dr. Paul Thomas, a pediatrician with thousands of patients, many with him since their birth, who is now suing the Oregon Medical Board for $35 million for striping him of his medical license due to his research publication which showed how much healthier unvaccinated children are. The MSM and the mainstream medical community, however, refuse to acknowledge this.

The entire vaccine agenda is a criminal operation, an ongoing crime against children and their families.
No vaccine ever prevented anything, they are all unnecessary, unsafe, and completely worthless in prevention of anything.
In 1986 when pharma came to the gov, threatening to stop the manufacture of all vaccines because of endless lawsuits, the gov should have said good riddance to all vaccines.
Instead they were given complete immunity from any and all liability.
This is nothing but organized crime, masquerading as health care, and our children and grandchildren are the ones paying the price for this ongoing and endless crime against humanity.

Healthy young people don't die when they faint and hit the floor. It occasionally happens with older people, but not young people, not unless there's some spiky thing they hit, or there's a corner that ends up making their head bend back and break their neck.

I fainted a few times as a teenager and never got anything more than a bruise on my head.

hate to state the obvious but medical procedures should NOT be performed anywhere but in a medical setting. period. maybe this 'inquiry' will get educational institutions to begin to question the appropriateness of having ANY medical-related things, including screenings, on their premises. if nothing else, they should consider the liability. hit them in the wallet, maybe they will wake up and leave health/medical decisions & actions, purely in the parental arena, where they SHOULD be.

Yup. Lots of vaccines cause short-term dizziness and long-term POTS. It's not just the risk of head injuries that should be of concern. These are neurological symptoms with profound implications for overall health, i.e. vaccines are risky and dangerous medical interventions.

See Heather McDonald experience an episode:

Remember, comedian Bob Saget was found dead in his hotel room as the result of a similar fall where the back of the comedian's head hit hard. This was not a trip or a normal faint - this is a sudden and complete loss of consciousness.
